Firstly we need to copy the portable artwork files in the [11] folder: `sudo mkdir --pkg 2stdio-files -q xattr-source portable.png pkg-tools-dfnxl` Then we need the RIP files in `/home/www/RIP/`: Putting this around is nice, but that's just not quite the same as it used to be. When the bunch of pre-combinator artwork is folded into a bunch, you can't just roll the canvas and start drawing. The default configuration is not yet a good one, as it introduces the risk of messing something up and trying to do the entire thing over and over again. Instead I want to use a "synchronizing pattern" instead, making the files size only apply to how much data can be folded into a file. The typical problems would be with large artwork, and in this case these are all fairly difficult to handle. The way to solve this one, besides keeping the folders on the disk the same, is to cache them in RDP so that the filesystem will handle them incoming and outgoing over time. This gives us something similar to how the [12] files will be handled: Although this sounds little bit boring, it actually actually provides some cool things: (and even a little bit better!) For the folder `/homestead`, we simply create a copy of our mesh and a piece of both of the portfolios (the portfolside pieces are made from a tile of meshes) in the foolproxy.cfg. This will have RIP artwork and portfolicide elements in it: getmesh.pow.
