In a world with universal access to information, a printed copy is no longer the best way to get the information you want. There is an increasing number of printed and electronic publications available for free. Over the Internet, free e-books can be downloaded on mobile devices, tablets or laptops. Digital devices are not the only option for accessing and sharing information. In South Africa, access to information and educational resources has increased to allow for increased literacy and increased learning. The Internet allows for a rapid dissemination of information. Universities and libraries play a key role in the dissemination of information, however, the information available on the Internet is not controlled by these institutions. By choice. The Internet has also democratized information in the sense that anyone can access the information and that there is an increasing amount of information available and freely accessible. The Internet is a tool to empower its users by providing access to information, knowledge and culture. By allowing the masses and individuals to access information and knowledge on a global scale, the Internet creates transparency and allows people to connect. It doesn't matter where the information is from. Information is available on the Internet but the user still needs to be able to find the information and to have the skills to analyze information and use it. Even on the Internet, information is static. However, the Internet allows information to be adapted to different standards of information. At this point, the Internet is a tool which has created transparency. There are a number of considerations and aspects to be taken into account when you want to find or get information from the Internet. The Internet is user friendly. The Internet is constantly evolving and changing. For that reason, it is important to be on top of changes and updates. The Internet is a global medium and as such, information is available all over the world. There are many local and international websites which allows for the world to come together. In the past, information was kept in the institutions -
