DNG File Format The Digital Negative (DNG) file format is a neutral standard for storing digital image data for professional use. It is intended to replace the TIFF format and is used by all the Adobe applications discussed in this book. DNG is a new technology based on TIFF's EXIF and IPTC metadata. The EXIF data include the time and date the photo was taken, the geographic information, and white balance, while the IPTC data has information about the photographer (some of which can be accessed by using Lightroom) such as copyright information, keywords, and copyright credits. Paula has taken to Facebook once again, following a report in the Sun that Simon had cut her out of the executive meetings at the launch of X-Factor 2 last week. She wrote that she had been told that the meeting had been planned to celebrate her fifteen years of X Factor and X Factor 2. "Please don't spread lies about me," she wrote. "It makes me feel ashamed that the truth should be so twisted." on some occasions when the forces of law and order seem to be overwhelmed by the crowds. The latter is happening in the region of Urumqi, but also other cities, even in Beijing itself. To restore a semblance of law and order is a delicate task, and it is also a task that foreigners should not ignore. As some have stressed, it is not enough that the authorities should stop being brutal, because "now the rhetoric is over, and the violence has started" [11]. Unrest also forces foreign companies to reconsider their positions, as they will have to live with the consequences of possible closure. Obviously, no one would try to blame the Chinese people, even if many are suffering. The numerous stock exchanges and campuses are packed with Chinese students, who are eager to graduate and get a high-paying job. Many of them have a lot of money to spend, and others are eager to welcome back the tourists who visit the emerging centers of the country. What many people cannot ignore is the fact that some "nationalists" see protests as a good thing, that this is what China needs: more protests, more violence, more crackdowns. They feel quite comfortable in a country in which a government official is sentenced to life imprisonment for questioning the Tiananmen Square massacre, while many officials, victims of the tragedy, are rewarded and given the chance to have children (this is what Mao Qiang, the deputy secretary of the Chinese Communist Party, used to say in reference to the massacre). All this seems to be totally out of touch with reality, but it only reflects the ideology that is driving China today, not its people, and not its young generation. And yet, the Chinese state is not such a monolith as it would seem. In recent months, there have been several signs that Chinese civil society is growing and expanding, and that this growth could have consequences. In May, a group of lawyers in Beijing issued a report denouncing the corruption of the former president of China [12]. They were mostly focused on the actions of the Communist Party, but they also talked about the government more generally. In October, it was the turn of the Shanghai Business Federation (SBF), whose director was sacked because he was deemed to be too pro-foreign [13]. He denied that he was fired for his comments, but the truth is that it was because of the support that he provided to the protests against the pro-Beijing takeover of the Shanghai stock market.
